UP CLOSE...

For Louise, great design solutions often go hand-in-hand with exceptional communication throughout the delivery of a project, from concept through to completion. It's her human-first approach that gives her work an empathic, thoughtful edge.

With over 19 years' experience in architectural practices, Louise understands the intricacies and nuances of design and how a carefully considered approach is essential. Her extensive experience within the education sector has given her a unique perspective and approach which she applies to the delivery of all of the designs that she works on.

What sets Louise apart is her unwavering dedication to her work and her ability to find inspiration in challenging design projects, irrespective of the scale. She finds immense satisfaction in transforming education facilities into modern spaces that both the students and teachers love.

"There's something so rewarding about working in the education sector - every project makes a difference to the entire school community," she says.

"There's something so rewarding about working in the education sector - every project makes a difference to the entire school community."

Louise's professional journey has been guided by invaluable advice she received early in her career: "You don't know what someone is thinking unless they tell you." This advice stuck with Louise and shaped the way she communicates with stakeholders and clients: openly, candidly and with curiosity.

As a leader, Louise embraces a collaborative approach and excels at communication. She understands the importance of adapting her communication style to suit the diverse range of personalities and needs of any given project, no matter the scope.

Outside of work, Louise contributes to the architectural community by tutoring and also guest lecturing at a number of universities in Brisbane. She's constantly inspired by the new generation of designers and architects, and finds immense satisfaction in guiding them using her years of experience.
